Remarkable Story of Local Rubber Trade

Is Interesting But Does Not Bear Scrutiny.

There has come to the Democrat information to the effect that an extraordinary departure is to be made in the local rubber industry, which, on its face, appears to be a spiendid scheme. Investigation discredits the information, and there seems to be not the remotest likelihood of the plan therein outlined being realized; but here is the story, which is interesting for its novelty if nothing more.

It is that there is a movement under way among Akron rubber manufacturers to form a crude rubber company to import for all the local factories the raw material they require. The pian, it was stated to a Democrat man, meant the establishment of an agency at Para, the buying of the rubber there direct from the producers, and its importation to the United States via the Gulf of Mexico, and its transportation to Akron via the Mississippi river, Ohio river and Ohio canal. A large bonded ware house would need be built here in Akron, else a warehouse at New Orleans would probably be

The Democrat's informant pointed out that the manufacturers could save in brokerage charges, transportation, etc., 25 per cent, on the price they at present pay for rubber, and that 121/2 son said: per cent. would pay the charges that would be incurred by handling the raw material themselves.

All this has a "wonder-why-no-onehas-thought-of-it-before" sound, but the story does not bear looking into. One reason is, that the brokerage charges on rubber bought in Akron amount had presented him with some tobacco far house built higher than the rest that they signal from one village to only to a comparative trifle and the profits of importers are not especially large. Akron factories require a great deal of rubber, but they would need top had been cut from the skull in tive women to view. able and thrilling adventure among the capulbals of New Britain,off New Guinea, Rev. John Hopkins Denison has returned to the Church of the Sea and Land, at Market and Henry sts., laden with gifts from the man-eating inhabitants of this wild island.

It was during this remarkable tour that Mr. Denison met Dr. Hermot, who had fled from the neighboring island of St. Mathias, where the leader of his party, Herr Menke, a German millionaire, had been killed by the natives and his secretary, Caro, devoured by cannibals.

A reporter who visited the study of Rev. Mr. Denison, at No. 61 Henry st., was shown many curios picked up during the stay among the cannibals. One gift from a cannibal chief was a perfect skull of a fourteen-year-old native who had been devoured by this particular tribe the week before the Rev. Mr. Denison arrived. In regard to this grewsome souvenir, Mr. Deni-

"They saluted every native we met with, 'We have had a great talk today, and we have grown well and strong thereby.' This was encouraging to us, as we never knew what moment we both might have been speared to death.

"As we approached another village a native ran out, crying: 'Ki! Ki!' which is pigeon English for food. We then stopped for refreshments, and a young man came out with a bundle done up in a banana leaf. This contained a slimy mass of beetlike leaves boiled with taro and cocoanut.
